I have been looking for this, but I could not find it on the internet. If you want to make any kind of changes or posts, please do so with my permission. Thank you

ST. LOUIS - The MetroLink Red and Blue lines will be turned back into one line (MetroLink) this weekend and shut down for about 10 hours for track repairs. The railcars will be out of service between 4 p.m. Friday, Aug. 31 and 3 a.m. Saturday, Sept. 1. MetroLink said the rail cars will be out of service along all lines and will be replaced by buses, light rail and streetcars. The Red and Blue lines will be single-tracking in order to make necessary track repairs. Single-tracking means just one track will be used to carry trains and this will occur between Big Bend and Land Clearance for Highway 65, Ballwin and Brentwood and Brentwood and Lindbergh. STL area Regional Transit System Director Michael Van Wyck said the changeover will cause major delays and service disruptions. Van Wyck said the most likely impact will be on the Blue Line, which currently operates from about 6:45 a.m. to 9 p.m. weekdays. If you plan on using MetroLink during the repairs, Van Wyck recommends using the 311 app and for rush hour traffic, the Red Line. "It's all about mobility, getting people and things where they need to go as quickly as possible," Van Wyck said. Sign up for the daily email 'Too often, the public sector gets a bad rap. But we know we can do better.' He said the impacts are not as severe as those caused by major tornadoes and said he's confident the repairs will be completed in time for the fall commute. "We've had many similar projects and it always seems to run smoothly," Van Wyck said. "We're optimistic and confident we'll be back on schedule for the fall." The single-tracking will cause major delays and service disruptions. He said the worst of it is during peak hours. "There will be significant delays," Van Wy 82157476af
